

Rapa Nui

Rapa Nui is an island located in the southeastern area of the Pacific Ocean. Rapa Nui is the Polynesian name of Easter Island; its Spanish name is "Isla de Pascua". It has a warm tropical climate. It is famous for its big stone statues called "Moais", that can be up to twenty meters tall. It has a few fresh water lakes, there are three important extinct volcanoes, covered in low vegetation, and there is one main sand beach, called Anakena. There are a lot of species of animals and plants, which are characteristic of this island, but there aren't many trees. It only has a few palm trees. Most tourists get to the island by plane.
